The Nichols House is without a doubt the most imposing building in Hurlock, as well as one of the best-preserved residences in town. Built in 1909 by one of Hurlock's most successful merchants, W.C. Bradley, it is an elegant and sophisticated example of the late phase of Queen Anne style architecture. Features of this style include the irregular skyline and massing of component parts, the use of patterned stained glass, and the commodious wraparound porch. Elements of the neo-Georgian are also in evidence here, particularly in the use of paired columns on the porch, as well as the large hip roof.
